CHINESE IMPERIAL GOVERNMENT no revolution in the order of things. The eighteen provinces have, under the Teing The COUPONS falling due 31st August dynasty, enjoyed a great deal of independence, like the States in the American Union, with, of course, this essential difference, that the ment at Peking and invested with arbitrary

> There has, however, of late years been a growing tendency on the part of the Peking Authorities to centralise the administrative power at the capital, and it is rumoured that this has been done under the advice of Mr. HART, the Inspector General of Customs. Now there is a good deal to be said, no doubt, in favour of this centralising policy, but it is also certain that much remains to be urged against it. The capital is situated at the extreme north of the Empire, far removed from the southern and western provinces, and the influence of the Central Government is naturally weaker in proportion to the remoteness of the province or district. Peking exercises no administrative functions over local affairs in the provinces, which are left to the Vicercy and other officials, but takes a large, and of late years an increasing, proportion of the revenues for Imperial purposes. The amount thus subtracted is often far larger than the provinces cancontribute without impoverishing the provincial treasury, and the officials are in consequence induced to resort to illegal people. Numerous memorials have appeared in the Peking Gazette showing that this is the case, and Viceroys have been compelled to beg, on several occasions, that certain taxes due to the Imperial Government might be remitted for a sesson on account of the poverty of the inhabitants. The Central Government have not interested themselves aufficiently in the welfare of the provinces. and have thought more about the contributions they have received for the Treasury than the well-being of the people. Indifferentism more than anything else has led to the weakening of the power of the Central Government over the provinces. Male imperando summum imperium amittitur ; and were it not for the traditionary reverence which officials entertain for the Throne, there would be chronic rebellions of a serious character. The policy of centralisation may possibly be effective in strengthening the military power of the Government, but it does not ensure contentment among the people, nor yet does it provide for an equitable administration. The system of Government is prolific in corruption and abuses of various kinds, each high official having his own ends to serve while he is at the same time obliged to preserve order in his province. We are decidedly of opinion that the provicces should not be asked to bear more than their fair share of taxation for Imperial purposes, and that they should be allowed to continueself-governingforall provincial purposes. It is urged by some that this course has a tendency to weaken the Imperial authority, and at first sight this might appear to be lous province might, like the present Viceroy of Chibli, grow inconveniently powerful, and, if occasion farouxed, disloyate But against. this contingency must be set the fact that no less than seventeen other high mandarins hold similar positions, and would be very loth to see an equal exalted to the superlative rank of the Son of Heaven. In the conflicting interests and jealousies of the various satraps who govern the eighteen provinces of the Empire lies the strength, and, in some sort, the weakness too, of the Imperial Goverament of Peking. What is most wanted in China is a reform in the system of administration—the abolition of the "squeeze" system. Let the officials be paid such a salary that no excuse can be afforded for the exactions by which the mandarins to receive a bribe, and the Chinese people would beable to obtain something like justice. dire necessity, to corrupt practices, so long defence of the coast, and the maintenance of justness communications be addressed to the vinces to the different governors is a point into which we will not go just now, as it is there can be no doubt that, in the first place, Peking is too remote to be an effective administrative centre; and, secondly, it is too

The parties to the suit are directors of the Man Wo Fong Co., formed for the purpose of working the opium farm in this colony, and the matter now before the Court was an exparte motion by the plaintiffs for an interim injunction to restrain the defendants from trading under the opium licence in consrtnership with any persin or persons other than his co-partners and coshareholders under an agreement of the 24th February, 1879, and from admitting the Yan Wo or Yu Kee Company and the firms composing the The profits were being used partly to pay these same from participating in the said opium opium boilers and was being shared and divided nership. The Attorney-General said the cironmon which they founded their right to the appliexactions which bear very harshly on the oation would appear as he read the declaration of Mr. Tam Tuk Shan, who was the second named plaintiff in the suit. The learned Attorney then read the statement, from which it appeared that under the provisions of Ordinance 2 of 1-58 and of 1872 tanders for the privilege of boiling and proparing opium within the Colony of Hongkong for three years from 1st March, 1879, were invited by advertisament on the 5th October, 1878. GENERAL GARFIELD'S GERMAN

.The German Press showed special friendship to General Grant so long as he was regarded as the probable inheritor of the Presidency of the United States. Ho was received with much enthusiasm in Germany during his last European tour, for now that the German element is becoming the preponderating one in American emigration, the fathers and mothers who are left behind in Enrops naturally take no small interest in the fature ruler of their sons who have gone across the Atlantic to set up new homes in the great Republis. Hence they have found a good deal ON BOMBAY. Bank, on demand ... 2221 of pleasure in the discovery that General Garfield, the necepted Republican candidate, is the product of an old German stock. Not long ago the Germans went so far on the road of American annexation as to claim the national sir of "Yankee Doodle" as a German, composition. The composer of that famous melody was a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, and wrote the famous air upon the banks of the Rhine, We are now informed by our German contemporaries that General Garfield's succestors were citizens of that little principality which borders on the great kingdom of Prassia, as the tourist is reminded when the Rhenish railway crosses the bridge over the Nahe. The possible future President's grand-parents emigrated from this district, and his parents could speak pure German. Shoreby before the birth of the present eminent representative of the old Hessian house of Garfeld the letter I was slipped into the surname in order to Angliciso or perhaps we should say Americanise—it. Brother Jonathan stoutly donies that a Hessian nomposer wrote. "Yankee Doodle," and possibly the American journals may produce a contradiction of the German claim to General Garfield, and bring proofs of his English origin. We do not know whether in the event of General Hancook, the Demo-General Garfield, the German genealogists are prepared to annex the Hancock family. - Globe.

DANGER FROM ICEBERGS.

The recent collision of the Titania with floating iceberg while on her way from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Miramichi, draws attention to the clarming prevalence of these striking rocks in the North Atlantic this year. The case of the Arizona which ran full-tilt into a colossal memory; and there are a number of other minor instances on record, where, if the yessel did not suffer suy mishap, she was in imminent danger of doing so. In fact the matter is becoming one of serious importance; and the sconer the attention of scientific navigators is turned to it the better. Science is so powerful to help nowadays that we may be sure she will devise a trustworthy means of indicating the vicinity of leebergs, and enabling mariners to take precautions against running into them. There are, at least, two obvious ways by which this might be done. One is to fit the forepart of the ship with a powerful electric light capable of being directed straight ahead along ther course. Fogs frequently surround an leeborg by reason of the cold condozoing the rapour in the air; but, whether in a fog or during the murkiest night, the penetrating beam from a five or ton thousand candle electric light, ought to pierce the obscurity and reveal the glistening whiteness of the frozen berg in time to allow the stoam to be shut off and the sails taken in so as to prevent a shock. or, at any rate, mitigate the force of collision, Indeed, the submarine cable-ship Faraday, while repairing the Direct United States Atlantic Caule off the banks of Newfoundland not long ago, was only saved from entire destruction by the revelations of her bow electric light. An other mode of detecting the neighbourhood of a berg is to keep a strict watch on the thermo motor. Bergs are always surrounded by a cold region, and the approach to one is indicated by more or loss sudden, of the thermometer. It would be advisable, therefore, that every ship should carry a highly sensitive thermeniciar on her binnacle, as well as a compass, and this instrument should be regularly consulted by the officer on duty. The time has arrived when some contrivance for telling the pradefault of something better, the electric light and some easily observed and self-recording thermometer are worthy of adoption and trial.-Globe.

THE EXTENSION OF GREECE.

M. Edmond About, writing in the Athenæum touches on the subject of the Berlin Conference. Last year, he says, "an invisible current of sympathy" was crossing the Channel; but the two Governments were not of the same mind regarding | Dzy Themometer..... 87.5 82.5 88.0 86.0 84.0 81.0 the little kingdom of Greece. "You thought as we did that it was necessary to give breathing space to an unlucky people confined within too Wenther narrow limits. Only the Beaconsfield Cabinst considered that we were over-liberal; no consideration would it extend Greece to Janina." "Is it not evident to-day," M. About continues, "that the Cabinet headed by the illustrious Mr. Gladstone has, by ensuring the trinmph of the Philhelionic cause, brought the two countries nearer ? I am not suspected of a blind tenderness for the Greek people. When I made its acquaintance I was very young, and it too, for we were about the same age, and youth is not exactly the indulgent age. But men, and peoples too, resemble fruits that as they ripen get rid of their soidity. A sincere observer, who had followed them step by step for fifty years, wentd certain recognize that their little faults are almost r the effects of several centuries of slavery and of the too narrow limits assigned to them by Europe on their smancipation. On the other hand, the grand qualities which distinguish them from all contemporary peoples are their own. The Greeks, in truth, are a noble race, worthy of a better lot, and I am happy to see that England and France are agreed to do them justice." On the present and practical aspect of the same question the Morning Post says :- The lavish generosity with which the claims of the Greeks have been met at the Conference only requires one thing in order to be capable of giving the requisite satisfaction to the partitioners of Turkish territory. It must be capable of being put into practical operation. In other words, Europe finds itself face to face in this malter with the formidable distinction between theory and fact. The theory of the Powers is that wide territories and four hundred thousand Turkish subjects ought to be separated from the rule of the Soltan and transferred to the Government of Athens. The fact is, that nothing of the sort has yet taken place, and that nobody protends to know how or when it is to take place." The Statist allows that "the Government has gained a very great success. The Berlin Conference, without delay, and with remarkable unsnimity, has awarded to Greece the accession of territory recommended by England and France. Greece thereby not only augments her population by nearly half-a-million of souls, and obtains room in which to grow; but, in a sense, she is declared by assembled Europe the rightful heir to the Ottoman succession. The victory thus won appeared the other day so difficult, that

A distinguished artist who had a great success with one of his pictures at the Academy got a frightfully large bill from the dealer who supplied him with colours, Going to remonstrate with him about the size of it, the dealer, shrugging his shoulders, replied, "Yes, my dear sir, I must confess that I have charged you rather Contributors or Business whether THEY high for them; but you must remember that ARE SHAREHOLDERS OR NOT. those are the colours with which you painted the pioture that was so brilliantly successful at the

THE LOST ANGEL An angel shill had slid Into the world, strange and alone: Yet did all love, at its first fountain hid, Spring up in her ausown. Her love grow up to fill Scones where the stambling torrents leap; O'er which, solf-galaxied and free of will, The golden engles aweep. But less was she among her flocks Than with the chambis on whose track she knng, The vanited avalenche that roofed the rooks The dearest home of all she served among.

Those eyes more richly abone Than heaven, more open in their love; All levely things rushed into thom as one Did she aven speak or move. Who gazed could never turn away, For there was maiden beauty, as at first, In its pure pemp and innecent display. Despite a world at man's own choice accuraced.

One comes whose lordly mion Gires all around a rastic air f So changed are all things in His presence seen, That only He seems there. His voice, but trembling, shakes her will; And who look on are rapturous at His power, Which can control a heart that budding still Yet droops as 'twas a heavy-laden flower. Can love for love alone, With all the bidden wee it sends; Can it to-day forecast the morrow's monn In which its passion ends? But nature's priest has set his key.

Within her heart, unlooked the golden door, And heaven sproads out; her soul in bliss is free; She looks not back, it is the earth no more. The key stays in her heart, And He who turns it finds consent:

Ho can those thrilling lips in love dispart, And close them in content. Har guzo is drawn into His gazo; She sees the light of heaven but through His eyes, She smiles, His smile as on His lip it plays; When He is sad she sighe again His sighe.

Where did those valleys lie That hid awhile hor childhood's dream And left a night-cloud on the noon-day sky, A shadow on the stream? All changes; soul in soul they track The scenes that tell her of those infant years; The wondrous dream o'er the lost path cames back The world she loved once more on earth appears.

Lost in His arms, she feels A happier childhood has begun, Until another change to her reveals The work of death is done ... O'er her, from birth, that lot had lowered; Born low, what here availed an angel's charms But by a lordly flend to be devoured And the sweet refuse cast out of His arms?

Her imocence remains, The poison dreg subsides and leaves A soul for over pure—that nothing stains; It is an orphan grioves. She trice her memory to repage, To markout there what thoughts to heaven she takes,
